Decatur, Delaware, Dubois, Elkhart,

It is not a coward lamentation which makes me say all this, General, but the lively sense of gratitude and thankful acknowledgements for your generous sympathy. I wanted to sketch the darkness of my destiny, that you might feel what benefit must have been to me your beam of light, by which you, from the capital of free America, Greene, have heightened my night.

It was in Broussa, General, that the notice of your imposing speech has reached me: in yonder Broussa, where Hannibal bewailed his country's mischief, and foretold the fall of its oppressors—Hannibal, exiled like myself, but still unhappier, as he was accompanied in exile by the ingratitude of his people, but I by the love of mine.

Yes, General, your powerful speech was not only the inspiration of sympathy for unmerited misfortune, so natural to noble, iceling hearts; it was the revelation of the justice of God—it was a leaf from the book of fate, unveiled to the world. On that day, General, you were sitting, in the name of mankind, in tribunal, passing judgment on despotism and the despots of the world. judgment on despotism and the despots of the world; and as sure as the God of Justice lives, your verdict will

The following is Corwin's memorable letter to Gen. Flournoy, of Va efusing to go into General Taylor's cabinet, before he was asked—first, because of his violence as an abolition st, and second, because of his treason during the Mexicum war. The idea of calling all who spoke with cheet of his position on the latter question, "fools and de aogogues," is a new compliment to our brave troops. Corwin did not refuse, however, to go into Fillmore's cabinet, for then General Taylor was out of the way, in his honored grave. It is amusing to see how differently he acted while voluntarily offering to protect the fame of the living hero, and while offerhimself as the means of outraging the memory of the dead patriot:

Dear General: I received your note last evening. If were much less modest than I really am, I should blush I were much less modest than I really am, I should blush still for the over-estimate your partiality will put on my poor abilities and still poorer efforts. For the friendship

He will be attacked, by southern democrats especially, on his supposed position on the Wilmot proviso. A seat held by me in his cabinet, would be proof positive on that point. I would no more allow him to be assailed through me, than I would thrust a man between my head and a bullet. In the next place, fools and demagogues all over the republic could talk with effect of my position on the Mexican war; all these shafts (if they fly at all) shall strike my bosom and no other. General Taylor should select men to whom no such positive objection exists.

The book before us is a well written and judiciously arranged biography of the illustrious here and patron whose eservices to his country and mankind are second only to those of Washington. At this crisis in our history, it cannot fail to be received with favor by the community. Gen. Jackson, in his lifetime, was among the noblest of patriots, looking only to the welfare, honor and glory of his beloved country. It was his privilege to preside over the destinies of the nation at a crisis not unlike the present; and it was his voice, sounding like a trumpet through the land, that awakened the patriotism of his countrymen of peril, and myster of the mighty dead, warning his countrymen of peril, and myster of the mighty dead, warning his countrymen of peril, and myster of the mighty dead, warning his countrymen of peril, and myster of the mighty dead, warning his countrymen of peril, and myster of the mation the State Papers of Gen.
